Inhalte:	Biosphere Reserves are pilot projects where new configurations of people-nature relations are dynamically put to test. A significant proportion of these areas recognised by UNESCO overlap with mountainous landscapes. Climbers are relevant actors of change. Why do we climb mountains? Climbing or mountaineering is the physical activity of self-propelling our bodies up steep gradients for no primary useful purpose, or a psychological reward for the burdens of maturity and responsibility. How is climbing a better human alignment with the rest of nature? In this informal presentation, the facilitator and the audience will approach the intersection between climbing, conservation and sustainability. The presentation may contain accounts of South African and Vietnamese mountain undertakings, with pics.
